Numerous complaints have lately been made of robberies on board vessels in the harbour It is the common practice of the thieves go on board under the pretence of having business with some of the officers or to vend goods to the crew. Once on deck they watch their opportunity keenly, and too frequently it is afforded them. The officers are usually too busy to spare much time to look very parrowly after light-fingered gentry, even if they suspect their presence, and the crew are often very careless. Occasionally the bouty. gained by these pilferers is very considerable; and they are by no means particular as to what their plunder consists of. Goods to the value of £70 were carried off from the P. & O. Company's steamer Pera the other day. The modus operandi of these marino robbers is tolerably well planned and but sel- capable, near the old Civil Hospital, was fixed dom involves them in trouble. A boat waits below, alongside the ship, and into it articles are slyly dropped when the attention of the owners or crew is distracted. The evil seems to be increasing, probably because the risk is that robberies of this description are frequent, not great in proportion to the profits arising from it. But the captains and officers of the vessels really have themselves chiefly to blame for the losses thus incurred, for they allow a far too indiscriminate boarding of their decks by pretended bawkers and coolies. They are also often extremely careless in the matter of leaving doors and windows open. It. is not surprising, under these circumstances, and it is to be feared they will continue to be whom he had known for two mouths. > SLIP BETWEEN THE CUP AND LIP A popular old ballad, after a reference to or rather a series of unfortunate incidents, conaiderably marred the enjoyment of what ought to have been a wedding. It seems that a railway engineer, M. Simon, living at Shumla, was to have been murried on that day to a young Bulgarian lady, with the full approbation of her relatives. The bridegroom and his friends assembled at the house of the bride, where a Bulgatian priest was to unitathe bappy couple. The priest, however, never arrived, but several groups of young Bulgariant assembled outside the house, under the instigation of two schoolmasters, to prevent the marriage, as M. I was so engrossed, too, with the novel duties of suppressing turbulence and debauchery that I had not much time left for anything else. On the fifth day, therefore, after arriving at Bagamoyo, the bugle announced the march, and, though we had some trouble in collecting the laggards, by nine a.m. the last man had left the town. At Shamba Gonera, my former first camp, the men munifested a disposition to stop, in order to bave " one moranight of it "at Bagamoyo; but by this time, as you may imagine, had bad enough of such scenes, and they were bodily driven on by the armed guard, not without considerable violence. preparing my last letters, I was rather surprised by a visit paid me in my camp from a party of the Sultan's soldiers, the chief of whom bore a letter from the Governor of Bagamoyo, wherein he complained that my people had induced about fifteen women to abandon their masters. On mustering the people and inquiring into their domestic affire, it was discovered that a large number of women had ladeed joined the expedition during the night. Most of them, however, bore free papers accorded to them by the political agent at Zanzibar; but eleven were, by their own confessions, runkway slaves.
